

10 The Queen Adelaide

Customer Review

The Queen Adelaide sits on a busy corner of Uxbridge Road midway between Askew Road and Shepherds Bush Green. Like many pubs struggling to survive the smoking ban and recession, the Queen Adelaide was comprehensively refurbished in 2008. It's now a modern gastro pub with open kitchen and dining room. However it manages to retain the warmth and character of a traditional pub.

The menu is limited and typically gastro, but it's fairly priced. A steak sandwich is £6, beer-battered fish and chips is £10, and the most expensive dish is spice lamb rump at £13.50. Pints cost £3.40 and there's a good selection of real ales.

And be warned: the place is packed when QPR play at home.

Décor is simple. A chandelier in the centre of the dining area complements mellow wood paneling, comfortable sofas, and a domed fireplace.

The entrance is step-free, and the spacious layout is good for wheelchair access. Outside though, wheelchair users can only be seated on the end space of the terrace at picnic style tables.

Overall, the Queen Adelaide scores well. It's a bit of rarity really. A smart, modern London pub that's managed to retain some of its local charm.

"A friendly gastro pub. Good service, good food promptly served. Would recommend."
